

Dear Erasmus+ Partners,

Alexander Technological Educational Institute of Thessaloniki (ATEI-Th) has an international strategy based on the principle that learning abroad equips students with a wide range of competencies, which, in addition to improved language skills and knowledge gained through study, provides the ability to understand different perspectives and cultures and lead to self-reliant, independent and culturally aware individuals.

We believe that international exchange programs highlight the role of universities: their political and societal responsibilities and their contribution to the dialogue towards the common good.

ATEI-Th is involved in partnerships with a number of universities and research organizations in the UK covering several scientific areas.

Following the UK EU referendum, the vote for UK to leave the EU raises many practical questions about research and higher education, however, we want to ensure you that over the coming years we will continue to support our UK partnerships and the Erasmus+ programme to the full extent.

Whereas we fully respect the outcome of the UK EU referendum we believe that the strengthening of ties between our institutions is to the mutual benefit of our students and staff.

Yours sincerely

Panagiotis Tzionas
